New Art Exchange, the UK's only centre dedicated to African, African Caribbean and South Asian visual arts, and the largest facility of its kind outside of London, is celebrating a year since it first opened its doors. Members of the Board, strategic funders and local artists came together to mark the first anniversary with the unveiling of a commemorative banner on Friday.

The New Art Exchange was opened in September 2008 in Nottingham's Hyson Green, to provide a creative space dedicated to meet the artistic and cultural needs of local residents, as well as showcasing art of international standing. The centre not only holds exhibitions in its gallery space but has also hosted theatre productions, music festivals and an extensive educational programme in its' hugely successful inaugural year. Funded by both Arts Council England and Nottingham City Council, its biggest success has come from its ground-breaking commissions with international artists, as well as bringing strong contemporary art to the local community.

Highlights over the past year include:

- Over 150,000 people experienced work commissioned and produced by New Art Exchange
- Over 300 artists took part in exhibitions, events and activities produced by New Art Exchange
- A strong programme of NAE curated exhibitions including An(other) Story, Strength of Feeling by Sokari Douglas-Camp and Next We Change Earth

Cat Arnold - Assistant Portfolio holder for Leisure, Culture and Customers, Nottingham City Council said:
"New Art Exchange is a superb initiative that puts Nottingham on the map culturally. I have been particularly impressed by its location and accessibility, as well as the diverse audiences I have encountered here. Congratulations also for a very innovative programme that is both artistic and socially relevant."

Peter Knott - Director of Arts and Development, Arts Council England commented: "I think it's fabulous that New Art Exchange is celebrating this milestone, a fantastic first year with some great art, not least the latest exhibition. Nottingham is becoming a real hotspot for visual arts and New Art Exchange is making a real impact nationally and internationally, whilst still making inroads within the local community."

Skinder Hundal, Chief Executive at New Art Exchange, said: "Since the launch of New Art Exchange we have achieved much over the past year, with three hugely successful exhibition commissions, strong links with the local community and a host of exciting opportunities for Nottingham residents. We're looking ahead to a bright future working with the best of international and local artists. Our aim is to establish a cultural quarter of international significance within Nottingham, and thanks to our funders, supporters, volunteers and patrons over the past 12 months we have been able to achieve this."

The centre reflects the richness and diversity of African, African Caribbean and South Asian art forms as well as showcasing the best in regional contemporary art. The New Art Exchange was formed as a partnership between APNA Arts and EMACA Visual Arts. New Art Exchange is located at 39-41 Gregory Boulevard, Nottingham NG7 6BE.
